Apple's official Webpage has the detailed description about how to install Windows 10 on Mac computers with BootCamp. BootCamp is not a virtual machine but a system that is already built-in your Mac. It allows you to boot either MacOS or Windows while opening your computer, therefore its performance is better than Virtual Machines. In order to switch between Windows and MacOS, you need to restart the computer. They do not share folders; it works as if two different computers are embedded in one system.

In short, you need to download 64-bit Windows 10 ISO file from Microsoft's Webpage and follow the procedure described by built-in BootCamp Assistant App step-by-step.

Remarks:

- Read Apple's Webpage carefully before starting in order to avoid any problem.
- Once you decide on Windows's storage, it is fixed. You cannot change it unless you erase and re-install Windows. You might need Windows for the courses in next semesters. Therefore, at least 75 GB of storage might be reasonable.
- If your Mac suits in the descriptions at the bottom of Apple's Webpage, you do not need any additional USB flash drive; however, if it doesn't, you need a USB flash drive with a storage capacity of 16 GB or more. Just in case, copy the contents in the USB flash drive to somewhere safe because the procedure might erase them. The USB flash drive is needed for only installing Windows, it doesn't have any relevance with Window's storage capacity.
- Have your phone with you while installing Windows as Apple's Webpage has further guidance about installing Windows and you might need to revisit it.
